Relevant results: Highlights: Tightly calibrated 100- μ m DEB-TACE is safe. 100- μ m DEB-TACE biliary toxicity is similar to lipiodol-TACE toxicity. Tightly calibrated 100- μ m DEB-TACE local tumor response is better than bigger DEB. Increasing the doxorubicin dose increase the complications rate of DEB-TACE. Patient comorbidities are as important as tumor response for survival in HCC.

Relevant results: The treatment of venous thromboembolic disease the treatment of choice is systemic anticoagulation. However, the interruption of the inferior vena cava with filters has been recommended when anticoagulation fails or there is a contraindication. Due to the rising inferior vena cava filter (IVCF) complications, physicians are encouraged to retrieve them when there is no longer recommended. In daily practice, it may be a difficult close follow-up of these patients. In this study, the primary objective was to evaluate the IVCF retrieval rate of all implanted filters in a Spanish registry. Secondary objectives were to analyze the causes of failed retrieval, procedure-related complications, and outcomes at a 12-month follow-up.

Relevant results: COVID-19 (SARS-CoV-2 virus) pandemic was recently declared by the WHO as a global health emergency. A group of interventional radiology senior experts developed a consensus document for infection control and management of patients with COVID-19 in interventional radiology (IR) departments. This consensus statement has been brought together at short notice with the help of different protocols developed by governmental entities and scientific societies to be adapted to the current reality and needs of IR Departments. Recommendations are the specific strategies to follow in IR departments, preventive measures and regulations, step by step for donning and doffing personal protective equipment, specific IR procedures which can not be delayed, and aerosol-generating procedures in IR with COVID-19 patients. It is advisable with this document to be adapted to local workplace policies.

Relevant results: The pelvic congestion syndrome (PCS), currently included in the “pelvic venous disorders in women (PVDw) due to pelvic varicose veins” is a pathological condition that suffers an important percentage of women that is usually characterized by abdominal pain lasting at least 6 months. There are different types of treatments but the most widespread is the embolization of pelvic varicose veins. We present a small review of the subject, and we contribute our experience of almost 20 years with more than 500 patients. Embolization of pelvic varicose veins seems to be a safe and relatively effective treatment in the vast majority of women.

Relevant results: | SUMMARY COVID-19 infection (SARS-CoV-2 virus) has recently been declared by the WHO as a global health emergency¹. On March 15, 2020, the Government of Spain declared the State of Sanitary Alarm due to the level of spread of the disease with more than 1002 deceased patients, 19,000 infected patients and 800 patients admitted to critical units (data from 03-20-20). A group of Spanish interventional radiologists, with this consensus document, declare their solidarity with all patients and express their willingness to work at the service of the health of all Spaniards. The objective of this document is to adapt the protocols controlled by the various governmental entities and scientific societies to the reality and peculiar needs of the RI.
