Summary of CV

This section describes briefly a summary of your career in science, academic and research; the main scientific and technological achievements and goals in your line of research in the medium -and long- term. It also includes other important aspects or peculiarities.

Over the past 5 years I have been investigating the complex and substantive relationship between people, nature and the environment. This interdisciplinary research explores the epistemology of new theoretical posthuman approaches, and contributes to a better understanding of the impact of the environment on human wellbeing. My research takes a new perspective on the relationship between humans, society and the environment, by employing an anthropological focus on considered 'material'. This refers to a variety of 'things' for example, commodities, money, technologies, landscapes and seascapes, or governance systems. This new approach is intended to bring us closer to the current intersection between humans and the material, within the current contemporary context. Fair access to scarce resources are fueled by many uncertainties: environment and climate changes, overfishing, biodiversity, pandemics, global warming and the disparate and unpredictable supply and distribution of both food and water. These issues trigger rising inequality, environmental degradation, and economic decline; and in response to this, innovative initiatives and economic practices are emerging in an attempt build a solid foundation for a more resilient, sustainable and equitable future economy. My research has mainly focused on initiatives related to local organic food systems, on-line platforms for collaborative food consumption, sustainable fishing, and the place of social anthropology in sustainable and environmental management. I explore all these concerns that seek to reshape the relationships between humans and the environment by looking beneath the traditional boundaries separating society and nature. Through these different economic initiatives and practices, I examine the socio-ecological relationships embedded in the complex and dynamic relationship that exists between values, policies, technology and economic motivations.
